Community Collab Brings Blessing Barn to Vassar

By ALEX SZWARC | For The Advertiser

VASSAR — In need of a few items to help you get by for a week?

The Blessing Barn is here to help. This winter, IRD Homes and a handful of other local businesses built a Blessing Barn. The 6-by-8-foot barn replaces the First Fruits box in Vassar.

The barn, equipped with shelves to place items on, a motion-detected interior and exterior lighting, and is mobile, was delivered on Feb. 16.

“As the need for food donations in our community continues to grow, it was clear that the original First Fruits box needed an upgrade,” IRD Homes posted on Facebook. “With the help of some incredible local businesses, IRD Homes was honored to bring the Blessing Barn to life.”

The barn is located at 225 Goodrich St. in Vassar.

“In our community, the old Krause’s Greenhouse, now the property owned by Morgan and Bryan Patterson, they’ve had a box out front called First Fruits, and essentially, it was a setup where people could drop off non-perishable items,” Corey Haubenstricker, owner of IRD Homes in Vassar, said.

IRD Homes is a home contracting business that has been in Vassar for over 20 years.

“My parents divorced, so my single mom raised us, so I can see the need of helping,” Haubenstricker, who headed up the project, said. “Some people are in need of a little extra some time to get by.”

The way the barn works is that folks can drop off items at the barn for others to come by and pick up as desired.

“Every year we do a project with the Vassar Food Pantry and raise some money every fall for that,” Haubenstricker said. “On social media, you see people every week who may need a little bit to get by and ask for emergency outreach.”

He commented that the First

The Blessing Barn is set up at 225 Goodrich St. in Vassar. IRD Homes and a handful of other local businesses built the 6-by-8 barn that replaces the First Fruits box. The barn serves as a collection point for non-perishable items.

Fruits box fell apart the last few years, and Haubenstricker thought now was a good time to have a more inviting and safe structure.

“Anybody can come to it and it’s out of the elements,” he said. “I see this as a central spot where if someone wants to donate to someone else, this can be a safe spot to have a drop off.”

Haubenstricker added that everybody does their part in the Vassar community and with IRD Homes being in the construction business, he knew a shed could be constructed, along with other trade businesses.

“This was a nice little community project to do in the Vassar area,” he said.

His goal is for other Thumb communities with a food pantry to have a Blessing Barn and has already been in talks with folks in Millington to bring a barn there. Blue prints are drawn up for the barn, should other communities desire to build one.

Other businesses that contributed to the Blessing Barn are Vassar Victory Center, Vassar Building Center, I.W.T. Drywall & Paint, Bierlein Trombley Electric, M&J Designs, Linx Excavation, and Larsen Graphics.
